The ability description says: Roll 3d6, add the modifier to the lowest of the d6, and add it to any other modifiers on the d6. If you roll a 1, or a 2 and a 6, apply those modifiers as one of those modifiers. If there are two different abilities which each modify a separate 6-sided die pool (e.g. +1 and +2), do you roll the two different dice pools independently, or is the ability modifier that results of the lowest value applied to the second pool? For example, the two abilities are: Ability 1: "Add a +2 modifier to an attack." Ability 2: "Add a +1 modifier to an attack." Does the Ability 2 modifier then apply to the pool modified by the Ability 1 modifier? A: This is how I interpret the rules as written. Let's take a look at what the ability says on the Random Number table: The modifier applies as a single modifier that's part of the attack roll. The modifiers still apply in order. The highest modifier wins. That's not the most intuitive thing to read, but it should be the default interpretation. Then it says: If you roll a 1, or a 2 and a 6, apply those modifiers as one of those modifiers. Which I read as
